within the ambit of the provisions of the Act and having regard to the object of the Act. The Court would not be in a position to judge the merits of the rival contentions of the parties when deciding an application for interim maintenance and would not allow its discretion to be fettered by nature of the allegations made by them and would not examine the merits of the case. The Court must have regard to the appellants own income and the income of the respondent.

12 Further, we are living in an era of equality of sexes. The Constitution provides equal treatment to be given irrespective of sex, caste and creed. An unemployed husband, who is educated, cannot be treated differently to an unemployed wife, who is also educated. Since both are on equal footing one cannot be asked to maintain other unless one is employed and other is not employed but not out of choice.

1 Therefore, in view of the above, at this stage there appears to be no necessity to award interim monetary relief to the complainant as she is clearly capable of sustaining herself and has sufficient income, to sustain herself during the course of trial. She wouldn't be reduced to a state of destitution or render without roof over her head if she is not awarded interim maintenance. Also, there are final reliefs in the main application under Section 12 of the Domestic Violence Act are yet to be adjudicated upon and hence rights of the complainant are protected. Further, the objective of
